

I understand from the Washington Post that Sinclair Broadcasting is requiring their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election, without equal time for a reply or alternative perspective from the Kerry campaign. If this attempt to provide free extended advertising for one side in the election isn't illegal, it should be. TV stations use the public airwaves and are supposed to serve the public interest. I fail to see how anything less than equal time for both sides can be in the public interest, and think you should assure that any station that you license keeps to that standard.
